World Hospice & Palliative Care Day Special Edition

Message from Founder President

Dear readers,

Every year World Hospice & Palliative Care Day is held to bring attention to the growing need for palliative care services all over the world. The theme this time calls on all of us to help build compassionate communities that will come together to support and look after those amongst us who are undergoing health related suffering.

The founder of the concept of compassionate communities, Prof Allan Kellehear, a medical sociologist, explains it this way: "It is about getting schools and workplaces, neighbourhoods, faith groups, to take up their responsibility to participate in end-of-life care..." This follows from his clear understanding that death is primarily a social event with a medical component and not a medical event with a social component as modern medicine would have us believe.

This is why quality of life matters at all stages of an illness and can not be confined only to relief from distressing physical symptoms or left to medical experts alone. The human being has multifarious needs that are best met when the community combines with medical and nursing expertise to offer treatment that uses a wholistic approach. One that makes space for psychosocial and spiritual concerns.

The sick person's family members also need support from friends, neighbours, colleagues, etc, as they face uncertainties and tend to their ailing loved one who could be a child or an adult.

It is in many ways harkening back to a past what we had a community that lived and died together. The world today has undoubtedly changed but can we not rebuild our communities to care for each other as they once did?

After all, the inescapable truth, shunned by many, is that we are all going to die one day. But does it have to be a lonely and excruciating death that denies us our right to leave this world in peace and tranquillity? The community voice must be heard and all relevant resources deployed on this crucial matter.

This World Hospice and Palliative Care Day, we appeal to each one of you to join hands with us to build compassionate communities that will ensure that those who suffer, especially the marginalised, will receive the love, attention, respect and care they deserve as citizens of a civilised country and a world that cares.

With best wishes,

Harmala Gupta
Founder-President

HOME CARE IN PUNJAB & HARYANA

In 2017, CanSupport made the strategic decision to extend its palliative care services to the states of Punjab and Haryana, both of which face a substantial burden of cancer cases, particularly in the Malwa region. The prevalence of cancer in these regions is significantly exacerbated by the widespread use of carcinogenic pesticides in agricultural practices, leading to their seepage into the soil and water.

Numerous districts within these states exhibit alarmingly high cancer incidence rates, with more than 120 cancer patients per 100,000 population, well above the national average. Bathinda district in Punjab, often referred to as the "cancer capital" of the country, and Haryana, contributing to 35% of cancer-related deaths in India, exemplify the gravity of the situation.

Initiating our home-based palliative care program in Amritsar, CanSupport has since expanded its reach to include Bathinda and Mansa districts in Punjab, as well as Rohtak, Sonapat, Jind, Faridabad, and Gurugram districts in Haryana.

Furthermore, in 2022, we took a significant step by establishing two outpatient clinics in Bathinda, located at the Advanced Cancer Institute and AIIMS Bathinda. These outpatient clinics serve as vital resources, offering free palliative care services to cancer patients seeking assistance with pain management, symptom control, side-effect management, nursing care, and counseling during their visits to these medical facilities.
